

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

5 A semiconductor device includes signal lines over which signals are transferred, and a drive circuit driving the signal lines in operating modes. The operating modes include a dynamic operation mode in which the signal lines are precharged, and a static operation mode in which the signal lines are not precharged.